Nancy Wynne Tells of the Strawbridge Dance at the Ritz-Carlton Last Night-She Sees Various Smart Costumes on the Street

THE Robert Strawbridges gave a ball for Anita last night at the Ritz-carlton, and really I never have seen anything as beautiful as the decorations. There was a perfect court of flowers, containing at least a thousand flowers, containing at least a thousand straightforward flowers. pink roses. The stage was entirely hidden with masses of pink roses and begonias banked at the back with ferns begonias banked at the back with terms and palms. Festoons of smilax and ping roses draped the walls and chandeliers and wreaths of boxwood and pink roses were placed over the arches at the entrances to the ballroom, while gold cornucopia filled with pink suppose they are here for the Christmas holidays. Fift was wearing a fur coat and a brown tweed hat with a long, thin phensant wing on one side. Later in the afternoon I met Lucile Carter, who is a first cousin of Carter Leidy, you know, and looks a great deal like her father. Billie Carter, I always think. Lucile was wearing a dark blue duvetyne coat made with the new full back that gives the impression of a sort of double cape. A wide collar of chinchilla fur finished the coat. Her hat was a small model of dark blue and she wore a lace veil of the same shade. It seems to me that a great many people were in to me that a great many people were in town yesterday, but it was a lovely day, and who'd stay in the country, anyway? Now let the countryites descend upon Nancy like a ton of bricks:

MARION was a wee lady of eight or nine years of age, and she was very interested and excited over seeing potatoes and onions sprout, and used to potatoes and onions sprout, and used to put them in vases and watch them with rapture. Well, one day several ladies telephoned unexpectedly that they'd be in for tea, and when lemons were looked for there were none. So as mother wanted the maid to arrange the tray, make sandwiches, etc., etc., she told make sandwiches, etc., etc., she told Marion to go to the store a block away and buy a dozen lemons. Off tripped the little girl, delighted with the errand, and, returning quickly, gave the bag to mother, who, dressed in her best, was waiting for the arrival of the guests.

chandeliers and wreaths of boxwood and pink roses were placed over the arches at the entrances to the ballroom, while gold cornucopia filled with pink roses were fastened on the walls under the side lights.

In the regular cafe room, which was used also for the ball and which was arranged with tables for bridge playing, huge bay trees were artistically placed about and joined to each other by garlands of smilax. In the center of the room was a fountain of marvelous beauty, playing over calla lilies and maidenhair ferns.

Mrs. Strawbridge and Anita received the guests in the rotunda, which was the control of the room was a fountain of marvelous beauty, playing over calla lilies and maidenhair ferns.

Mrs. Strawbridge wore a gown of nile green velvet, trimmed with gold lace, cut square at the neck and made with a court train which fell from the shoulders. Anita was lovely in a frock of silver lace, cut square at the neck, and finished about the waist with a girdle of American beauty tulle. Supper for 500 guests was served at 1 o'clock.

of the Smith College endowment rand, and I understand there are about a hundred women in Philadelphia who are Smith graduates. Of course, there will be many more than a hundred there, as both Miss Draper and Smith College are great favorites with the general public; and, besides, isn't there that beautiful foyer to go to?

Do you know I heard several persons talking at the Benedicks the other night, and they were saying that without exception that ball was the most beautiful they had been to this year; that the room was the most artistic and beautiful they had ever seen? I must say I think it is wonderfully beautiful, too.
